

9. I believe the broadcast of these ads invades the privacy of my family and my children, and is intended to cause emotional distress.

10. The broadcast of these ads presents a clear and real danger of inflicting emotional harm upon my children, other children in this community, and certain groups of women and men who have experienced the agony of an abortion, miscarriage, or stillbirth.

11. Through our federal government and the good offices of the Federal Communications Commission, I entrust local licensed broadcasters in my community with the obligation to protect my family and my children from the broadcast of material that would present a danger to their psychological and emotional well-being. I rely, and have a right to rely, upon the law of the land as regards the publication (or broadcast) of offensive material. The Supreme Court has said that the test is to be made according to (local) community standards. I therefore urge the FCC to allow local broadcasters to make that judgment based upon the standards of the community they serve, and that the FCC not impose its standards upon this local community.

12. I urge the FCC to enforce the intent of Rule 315 -- that a political candidate not be impeded by a station manager with differing political views. Clearly, the use of this protection by those "candidates" showing this material is an obvious fraud and a sham, and should not be allowed.

13. I am concerned about the precedent this sets as regards future (fraudulent) uses of this protection for "political candidates". Will we have an animal rights "candidate" showing our children how some people are cruel to animals by ripping the head off a cat? Will we have a vegetarian "candidate" showing the slaughter of a cow screaming in agony, to teach us to eat beans? Section 315 is there to protect a legitimate candidate for public office who presents his views in a responsible manner -- it is not there to allow the wanton disregard for common decency, nor to allow the specific targeting of and attack upon our children.

14. I am also concerned about a special group of children -- those who are institutionalized in hospitals, mental wards or jails. I was a child incarcerated for a time in a jail, and I remember the staffers' reliance upon television. It was a good babysitter, a good means of quieting and controlling inmates in a non staff-intensive environment. Hence, lots of television. These children are already acquainted with physical and emotional harm. This material will intensify their pain, and staffers in these institutions have little regard or time for "parental control".

15. I object to the legal notion that simply because he is running for public office, a person has less obligation under the law for his actions than I do as a private citizen. Indeed, he should be held to a higher standard.

16. I urge the FCC to relieve broadcasters of the obligation to show this material when, in their good faith judgment, it would violate their community's standards of decency.

17. I urge that the interpretation of Section 315 be changed to require that a broadcaster may not censor the message content of a political spot, but may require that the manner of its delivery be subject to local community standards. Simply put, a candidate who wants to run a spot urging a crossing guard at every street corner may do so, but he must find a way to present that message other than showing close-up views of a dead 4 year old child who has just been run over by a cement truck!

18. Finally, I urge the FCC to look beyond the "political ramifications" of the abortion issue in the instant matter. This issue has very little to do with abortion; it has to do with the public interest and welfare. I have been told by some of the "candidates" running these ads that they intend to "flood the airwaves" as we get close to the election. I urge, on behalf of my family and children, and on behalf of the President of the United States who espouses strong family values, that you act now before great damage is done to families across America.

I declare under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge, information and belief.

Schedule of Anti-Abortion Ads

CONCERNING ABORTION COMMERCIALS

In the next few days, an anti-abortion candidate for the US Senate will air political ads on television showing close-up views of a bloody, aborted fetus. I strongly object. I believe this is potentially very harmful to children and others in this community.

Regardless of which side of the abortion issue you are on, you may not want your children to see these television ads.

Here is the schedule as I've been advised, of when these ads will run:

Date	*Time	Program	Station
Fri-9/4	6:57 A - 9:02 A	This morning	#7 - KMGH
"	7:00 A - 9:00 A	Today Show	#4 - KCNC
"	7:00 A - 9:00 A	Good Morning America	#9 - KUSA
"	11:00 A - Noon	Joan Rivers	#2 - KWGN

Dr. Priscilla Zynda is a licensed psychologist in Colorado. She is in private practice specializing in the psychology of women. Dr. Zynda is president of Colorado Women Psychologists, is on the Board of Directors of the Colorado Psychological Association, and is a member of both the American Psychological Association and the Association of Women in Psychology. In addition, she is adjunct faculty at the University of Colorado, Denver, where she teaches various courses, including Psychology of Women.

Dr. Nancy Rainwater is a licensed clinical psychologist in Colorado. She is in private practice and works with adult women. In addition, she is a clinical affiliate with the University of Denver and a researcher and clinician with children and women. Dr. Rainwater is a member of Colorado Women Psychologists, the Colorado Psychological Association, and the American Psychological Association.

Dr. Diane Dudziak Salerno also is a licensed psychologist in Colorado. She is employed as a clinical psychologist at the Colorado Mental Health Institute at Fort Logan State Hospital, specializing in the treatment of hospitalized children. In addition, she is a clinical specialist in psychiatric mental health nursing. Dr. Salerno is a member of Colorado Women Psychologists and the American Psychological Association.

Although research is needed to determine if these ads specifically are harmful to certain populations, we can extrapolate from other studies and speak to psychology of women and children in general. It is our belief that these ads may be potentially harmful, particularly to children and certain populations of women: women who may have recently aborted, experienced a miscarriage or still-birth, are experiencing an unwanted pregnancy, or who are pregnant and are thinking about having an abortion.

Although these ads are not indecent or obscene, they are disturbing to many people. We are hopeful that the Federal Communications Commission has as one of its objectives the protection of citizens and society from harmful effects that may be incurred as a result of certain television viewing.

Parents can and should guide their children's viewing; however, the American Psychological Association task force on television believes that this does not relieve the television industry and public policymakers of their responsibility to ensure that television offerings are free of clearly harmful content (Huston et al, 1992). Although there is a warning before these ads air, this is not always adequate. Many parents do not supervise their children's television viewing or, even if supervising directly, parents may be momentarily busy and not hear the warning. In addition, children in institutions, hospitals, and the like whose television viewing is not always directly supervised may also be at risk.

Children are very concrete. They do not have the same frame of reference as adults do nor do they have the cognitive ability or the life experience necessary to interpret and understand ads such as these. Younger children also cannot discriminate between commercial and noncommercial programming (Wilcox, 1992). Seeing an image of a fetus in the particular context and with the emotional delivery which is displayed in these ads may make a vivid impression and traumatize some children.

In general, younger children have fears about bodily intactness and bodily injury. If they see these images of aborted fetuses, they could think that they could be injured or killed. Thus, distress could be experienced by these children if a parent is not present to help them understand and deal with their feelings. Even if a parent is present, children under the age of five probably are not capable of articulating what they saw and what is bothering them.

Yet, they can be experiencing distress. The reaction of children to these ads may be similar to middle age children's reaction to the film, The Day After. This is a film which depicted the aftereffects of a nuclear war. Upon seeing it, children were frightened (Cantor, Wilson, Hoffner, 1986).

In addition, some children may be more vulnerable and thus be at greater risk. Children who have had past experience with trauma such as bodily injury to themselves or a family member and children who have experienced a loss or death in the family, especially the death of an infant sibling, may experience retraumatization.

Thus, seeing programming which depicts crude and uncontrolled emotional displays may affect a child's affective growth negatively (Feshbach, 1988).

As previously stated, certain populations of women may also be at risk for harm: women who have either recently aborted, experienced a miscarriage or still-birth, or are experiencing an unwanted pregnancy.

Having an abortion is almost always a difficult decision. It is one which most women do not take lightly. Such a woman has many feelings, most of which are relief but she also may initially experience feelings of guilt, sadness, and grief. If a woman has recently experienced an abortion or is having an unwanted pregnancy and thinking about an abortion, she may be in a vulnerable period. Seeing these ads at that time may be harmful emotionally to her. Even at greater risk for harm are women who have been traumatized because of a fetal loss, either through a miscarriage or still-birth. These ads have the potential of retraumatizing her.

For many women, these ads may have no direct harmful effects. However, they may have a negative effect that is more indirect and subtle. Even when it is not intentional, television carries messages about interactions and about the nature and value of groups in the society that can influence attitudes, values, and actions among its viewers (Huston et al, 1992). Ads such as these add to and create a negative portrayal of women.

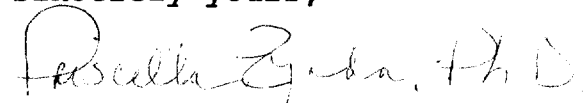

As you well know, television can have positive and negative effects on its viewers and it is a potentially powerful teacher about social relationships, intimacy, conflict and feelings (Huston et al, 1992).

We hope you will take the powerful impact of television along with the potential harmful effects these ads may have on certain populations and reverse your decision and ban these ads from being aired on television.
